Description

French, but who, by lack of practice or otherwise, are still sttmibling into the numerous pitfalls of that beautiful and difficult language. It does not purport to fill the place of any of the French methods, grammars, or hand-books used at present by students. I ts aim is to complete them, to a limited extent, by filling up a gap in the long series of these educational works. The remarks and hints -presented in the following pages are the output of the experience of many years in teaching French. The list of mistakes in prontmciation or construction is unique and very extensive; we are confident that it will materially help the student and facilitate somewhat the task of our fellow teachers.
